

DENIED SHELTER, HER BABY DIED.

Cecelia Frank, Discharged from Bellevue, Was Friendless.

HELP CAME TOO LATE.

Child's Nursery Refused to Receive the Baby and the Mother Feared to Go Home.

INFANT DIED FROM EXPOSURE.

Bellevue Hospital Officials Declare That the Mother and Baby Were Both

Well When They Were Discharged on Saturday.

From 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon until after dark Cecelia Frank wandered about the streets of New York seeking shelter for herself and her seven days' old infant.
At 6 o'clock Saturday night, worn out and discouraged, the young mother intently fatigued on the door step of the Good Samaritan in Avenue A.

When early yesterday morning the young mother left the hospital shelter of her unknown friend's abode she carried the dead body in her arms to Bellevue, and, before the officers of the hospital were astir, she asked the gatekeeper to show her the way to the Morgue.

Sought Friendship of the Morgue.
"I want to leave my baby," she said.
"It is dead now. It was alive yesterday, but they put us out of the hospital and it died. I dare not take it home."

The gatekeeper did the only thing he could have done under the circumstances. He sent the half-dazed woman, with the little corpse in her arms, around to the Twenty-second Street Police Station. There the girl again told her pitiful story.

"It was so cold," she said, "that I couldn't keep the baby warm while I walked the streets. It got all blue and stiff. They wouldn't take it back into the hospital and it died. Please let me leave it here, and then I can go home. I dare not go home with it. My brother said he would kill himself if I brought disgrace upon the family."

Coroner Hooper was notified and Cecelia was kept at the station until he arrived.
He examined the child's body and found that it had died of exposure. He let the mother go and she returned to her parents.

Yesterday afternoon she and her mother said that after being told that they were too late for the Randall's Island boat, they had gone to the Child's Nursery, in East Fifty-first street, where the matron had refused to admit the child, saying the wards were all crowded.

"I had to leave her there," said old Mrs.
Frank. "I didn't dare take her home with the baby. I was afraid my son would commit suicide on account of the disgrace. But she's welcome now that she comes alone."

Superintendent Murphy's report satisfied Coroner Hooper that Cecelia had not been sent out of the hospital till she and her baby were well able to go. "I examined it carefully," said Dr. Dow, "and it was all right enough and warm enough when the mother returned with it at 5 p. m."

Cecelia Frank. Whose Little Baby Died for Want of Shelter.

stumbled up the stoop of a house in Avenue A, near Seventh street, and clutching her dying baby in her arms, sat down and wept aloud in sheer despair.

Then, if, as said, the angels always wait near earth to hail the Easter morn, they had an opportunity to chronicle one of those acts of tender charity which women of the very poor stand always ready to offer to those more miserable than themselves.

A woman, hearing the other woman crying, opened the door of her poor home, and asked the sufferer in. Hearing Cecelia Frank's pitiful story, this good Samaritan offered her shelter. The mother's life was saved by the kindness of this stranger, whose name Cecelia Frank does not know, but the long exposure to the chilling air had done too much for the week-old baby.
It died during the night.

Then, twelve days ago an eighteen-year-old girl, who gave the name Cecelia Frank, and said she had no home or friends, applied for admission at the City Emergency Hospital, in Twenty-sixth street. She was admitted to the maternity ward, and there, on Sunday, April 11, her baby was born. It was christened "Louie," and the girl's mother said its father's name was William Freund.

Two days after the birth of the baby, Cecelia, with her child, was transferred to the convalescent ward at Bellevue. Both mother and child gained strength and health rapidly, and on Saturday, Dr. Dow, in charge of the convalescent ward, discharged them.

When told that she must leave the hospital, the girl wept and begged to be admitted to remain longer.

"I have no place to go," she said, "no place where I dare take my baby."

She asked to be allowed to leave the child. She tried to go to an Italian woman named Rose Laroque, whose own baby had died shortly after birth. Failing in that, she said the nurses in the ward, she succeeded the baby beneath a sheet of her pet, and tried to go away and leave it.
She was detained, and Dr. Dow was summoned. He questioned the girl, who finally broke down and said that she was not Cecelia Frank, but Cecelia Friend, and that her parents lived at No. 101 Allen street.

Dr. Dow had her mother summoned.
The two women left the hospital, taking the baby with them. That was at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon. Dr. Dow had given the address of the Superintendent of the Outdoor Poor, the Home for the Friendless and the Foundling Hospital.

At 5:30 in the afternoon Cecelia applied at the convalescent ward again and begged to be readmitted. Her mother was not with her, and she explained that she had reached the office of the Superintendent of the Outdoor Poor too late to catch the boat for Randall's Island.

"The baby is sick," she said, "and I have no place to go."

Dr. Dow again examined the baby and told the girl he could not take it back into the hospital.

"You had better go to the office," he said, "and they will send you in an ambulance to some other institution."

Cecelia did not go to the office. She went into the streets, and in a dazed way, walked about looking for shelter for herself and the child until she dropped down
